

Francis Vérillaud is Vice President of Sciences Po Paris since 2002 and the Director of International Affairs and Exchanges at Sciences Po since 1995.

In his position, Francis Vérillaud has been the main architect of Sciences Po's internationalization strategy. He contributed to shape vigorously the large opening of the institution to international students and faculty, to negotiate and set the educational and scientific institutional programs such as the dual degrees with the School of International and Public Affairs at Columbia and the London School of Economics and Political Sciences and many others, including the Global Public Policy Network or create the Alliance Program at Columbia University with Université Paris I Panthéon Sorbonne and Ecole Polytechnique. He is also responsible for the implementation of a unique international university network which gives Sciences Po a worldwide notoriety.

Previous to coming to Sciences Po, he has held several positions within the Ministry of Affaires étrangères in France, being posted in Washington and Santiago de Chile. He has taught Economics classes in several French lycées, at Universidad Catolica de Chile and at Sciences Po.

Francis Vérillaud is a graduate in Philosophy from Paris University Nanterre and a graduate from Sciences Po Paris. He is a member of the steering committee of the Sciences Po MPA Program and of the Copernicus Program and also a member of the board of the Théâtre du Mouvement.

He was awarded the honorific distinction of Chevalier de l'Ordre des Palmes Académiques in 1996.